RISTORI AS ELIZABETH.

asm of the age that beheld them, continue to glow, bright legendary stars in the imagination of after generations. To the "Lady Macbeth" of Siddons, the "Shylock" of Garrick, the "Richard HI." of the elder Booth, the "Juliet" of Fanny Kemble, the "Phedra" of Rachel—to these must now be added the vision of "Elizabeth," Ristori's peculiar and great ereation. In other parts, in "Mary Stuart," in "Phedra," in "Lady Macbeth," she provokes comparison with the mighty dead, with Siddons and Rachel; in "Elizabeth of England," she stands alone; others may essay the task, as she herself has essayed the tasks of her predecessors and cotemporaries, but they will essay it in vain. Nature must make another woman as royally beautiful, with as make another woman as royally beautiful, with as large a brain, with a heart as deep and tender, before there will come another Ristori, to show us the fair vestal through in the West, the great Eliza as she lived vestal inforced in the west, the great kind as she lived and moved. Yet, as we write these words, it occurs to us to ask whother any age has been so rich as ours in dramatic genius. Our grandfathers saw Siddons and Garrick; our fathers enjoyed Kean and Booth; and there are men and women still living, who beside seeing all these in full splendor have lived to appland, neside. Fanny Kemble and Cushman, Rachel and Ristori. Surely it is hard to believe that the age poets one. At least, if it does not give birth to great poets, it gives birth to those who can interpret the vorks of the great poets who are gone, and this is

To thoroughly understand and enjoy a performance like that of Ristori's "Elizabeth" demands natural sympathy, culture and learning. It is a product of undeniable genins, but of a genius trained by arduous practice and enriched by careful study in many fields. practice and enriched by careful study in many fields. To these who follow it with prepared minds, it affords a deep and satisfying delight; to younger spirits much of it must be incomprehensible—many of its beauties must pass unperceived; indeed, we may well believe that there are few persons among those who make up these audiences who thoroughly comprehend the wonder they are beholding. They admire the rich dresses, they are excited by the striking situations, they are carried away by the passions, melted by the tears; but there is something more than this, which can only be felt and understood by those who are prepared by thought and education to understand Ristori's truth to nature, her delicate sense of humor, Restor's truth to nature, her delicate sense of hunor, her intense feeling, her refinement of culture, her rich imagination. These qualities break upon us as we follow her through the play—they come out more and more strongly as memory recalls what we have seen; but we know that we must see her often to judge what has cost so much to create.

'Elizabeth" seems to us an uncommonly good g-play. Historically it is worth very little, that dging it by literal standards, though we think it utilizely it may be much truer to the spirit of the than it is to dates and the juxtaposition of its. We do not need to dwell on the misstatements and anachronisms of the play; they are too patent, and are no doubt deliberate on the part of Signor Giacometti. The construction of the play shows a man of too great talent to permit us to think that he did not know very well what he was about. He had two principal objects in view. He meant to keep Elizabeth on the stage through the whole play, and to make the interest all centre in her. He meant has record now only not forwar her, but that we that we should not only, not forget her, but that we should all be her lovers, that we should all be ready to do and dare for her, and that we, too, with old Burleigh, whom he graciously makes live a few years after the historians put an end to his wise and useful life, should fling ourselves upon her lifeless body, and bewall her death with tears. This, first, he meant; and then he had in mind to make this grand figure of a woman move through a scene com-pact of all the chief events of her time, the events that always rise to our thoughts when the name of Edizabeth is spoken. He meant that we should hear Kizzbeth is spoken. He meant that we should hear the names of Bacon. Spencer, Raleigh, Shakespeare: that we should hear of Leicester's fall, and follow Essex's love; that the Armada should be defeated, and Davison punished, and Drake be feasted and Burleigh trusted; that Mary Sthart should die, and that the Queen should trimaph; that Essex should die and the woman's heart break beneath the royal purple. The play-wright has done his task well and produced a succession of scenes that keep us interested and absorbed to the end. This was his work, to sketch the outline of the picture; it was for Ristori to fill up the canvas, and she does it after a memorable fashion.

We have spoken once before of the resemblance of Canvas, and she does it after a memorable lashion.

We have spoken once before of the resemblance of Ristor's style to that of Charlotte Cushman, next to Ristor the finest elecationist we have ever heard.

The oftener we see F stori, the higher does Cushman The offener we see Fisici, the laguer does to share rise in our estimation. Truly, she was a great artist; a woman of natural genius, of culture, of refinement; and an actress beside who held her high art in reverence, and labored in it with zeal and conscience. One gift God denied her, the gift of beauty, and wanting that she had never fair award of the crown that was

But Ristori's beauty is something marvelous. It is all grace, all tenderness, all majesty, all laughter, all passion, mingled in such a way that we believe all the stories we have ever heard of the power of beauty, in fable or in sober history. And when a mind like here, a soul like hers, an intelligence so deep, a wit so keen, such a power of feeling, speak to us through such a face, mure below a with such a gate, when such a face, move before us with such a gait, so robed and adorned, we find it hard to analyze this gracious vision, hard to write formal words of eulogy, or tem-

Per words of criticism.

Her voice, too, is another gift. In the scene where Her voice, too, is another gift. In the scene where she dictates the two letters, one to Davison, recalling Leicester, the other to Bacon, rowarding Shakespeare, the varied power of her fine voice is felt. How quickly it changes from dignity to condescension, from anger to sweet, low tones of praise, from sarcasm to flattery. Now a flute, and now a trumpet, if Elizabeth spoke so, what wonder that her poets and countiers told her that she sang like another Orpheus. But that was a stilted comparison, and could convey no idea of such a voice. Never has it been our lot to hear such tones. It may seem trivial to speak of dress, because the a voice. Never has it been our for to hear such tones.

It may seem trivial to speak of dress, because the dresses of the stage have rarely anything remarkable in them, or what is of interest beyond the hour. But this was not so with Hachel, whose dresses first taught us all that costume might mean, not only of beauty and grace, but of historic fidelity. Nor is it any more the case with Ristori, whose sense of what is fitting and beautiful is some times scarcely less than that of and beautiful is some times scarcely less than that of Råchel. We suppose there is little doubt that in this play of Elizabeth, especially in the three first acts, we see the English Queen as she was seen by those about her. Her dress in the first act, of green velvet and gold, her hair sat with diamond daises, with the small crown surmounting all, is royal robing. Thus arrayed Elizabeth moved and walked; this conscientious attacked to the same of the woman delights us. Elizabeth moved and waked; this conscientious ac-tempt to portray the aspect of the woman delights us; we respect Ristori as much for it as we repect Carlyle and Macaulay for like faithfulness in their depart-ment. Her dress in the second act—of black velvet, with a border of gold lines about the skirt; long, tight sleeves, of white satin, puffed from the wrist to the shoulder, and a cap of pearls and a rich stomacher of jewels—has more a modern look than the first, but it is nevertheless faithfully studied from historic portraits. It is when she wears this dress that the portraits. It is when she wears this dress that the beautiful tendor scene takes place between her and Essex, where Ristori shows what she is capable of it comedy; indeed, this act is the finest of all for variety of incident and play of character. Nothing can surpass Ristori's rendering of hypocrisy where she signs. Mary Stuart's death warrant, or that with James VIth, and probably nothing was ever finer than the change that comes over her whole face and action when she hears of the return of Drake. The change is full of nature, it is sudden but not violent, we feel her joy as we had almost believed in her sorrow, and the air of almost girlish delight with which she listens to the almost girlish delight with which she listens to the good news from sea, is delicious in its honest simplicity and heartiness.

In the third act Ristori gives us a splendid and ac-

In the third act Ristori gives us a splendid and accurate picture of Elizabeth as she must have looked when she put on all her state. This dress is an exact reproduction of that worn by Elizabeth when she went to St. Paul's to return thanks for the defeat of the Armada. Any one who will be at the trouble of comparing Ristori's costame with the old cotemporary print representing Elizabeth as she appeared on that occasion will be delighted with the faithfulness of the restoration. How the audience can allow such a faithful piece of historical painting to appear before them, and not rise to their feet with cries of delight, puzzles us hugely. Here is a picture faithful to the exactest detail, not trimmed in any way to suit modern notions, and so richly, fantastically splendid, that we are lost in admiration, and cannot bear to take our eyes from her for a moment. Her dress is of rose searlet, embroidered all over with gold, with the well known long waist, the short petticoat fringed with silver, and stretched tightly ever the hoop without folds, the long train of velvet with a deep border of rich embroidery in gold thread, of fine design; a stomacher stiff with jewels and crossed and laced with ropes of pearis and lewels; round her neck the fan-like ruff of delicate lace strewed with gold flowers, and on her royal head such a mognating crown, all starry points, and flower-like blossoming, a wonder to be seen, but not described. Thus Elizabeth looked when Drake (and Effingham) came home to be crowned for the defeat of the Armada, and as she sits upon the throne, we well believe that Shakespeare and Spencer, Sidney sof the Armada, and as she sits upon the throne, we well believe that Shakespeare and Spencer, Sidney and Bacon sung to her the true homage of their hearts.

The first four acts of Ristori's "Elizabeth" are destined to rank among the few great masterpieces of the art of acting, which, having roused the enthusions of the age that beheld them, continue to glow, bright legendary stars in the imagination of after generations. To the "Lady Macbeth" of Siddons, the "Shylock" of Garrick, the "Richard III." of the clear Booth, the "Juliet" of Fanny Kemble, the "Phedra" of Rachel—to these must now be added the vision of "Elizabeth," Ristori's peculiar and great to history, it is untrue to the conditions of Elizabeth's the last act she is a woman a hundred years old; a bideous hag, and her death-struggle is revolting to human nature. Up to this mement our respect and admiration for Ristori are unbounded, we give her willing homage, but she descends from her high position to this melo-drama, and deeply as we are moved by it, our judgment refuses to applaud.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

FLORIDA. CONDITION OF THE FREEDMEN.

BY TRESCRAPS TO THE TRIBUNE.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The report of Major-Gen. J. G. Foster, Assistant Commissioner of Freedmen, District of Florida, for October, has been received at the Freedmen's Bureau in this city. Gen. Foster reports that there men's Bureau in this city. Gen. Foster reports that there is little chauge in the feedings evinced toward the freedmen in his district since his last report; that they are generally kindly and fairly treated, but that some cases of barbarous and unjust conduct on the part of bad men have come to his knowledge. At two points, Cedar Keys and Monticello, it was found necessary to send dotachments of soldiers to assist the officers of the Bureau in performing their duties and protect the loyal refugees and freedmen. No facts regarding these disturbances are given. There are many cases of arbitration, owing to the approaching close of the working season. It is stated that the people are greatly interested in politics, and exhibit a warm sympathy with the President, and cordually indorse his proclamations. Among violent parties some animosity has become apparent toward the Northerners and those citizens who aided the Union cause during the war. The negroes manifest a deep interest in securing lands, and the whole number of acres entered during the month was 22,320. Gen. Foster transmits also the report of the Superintendent of Education, which is hopeful in the extreme. Everything is very favorable, and the improvements in his branch excite his warmest expressions. According to the Superintendent, there are the kindest feelings of sympathy and regard between the Southerners and the freedmen, and the former have no desire to keep the black man down. They are very willing, and even desirous, of seeing the latter educated. In the day schools there are about 1,500 scholars, and nearly the same number of adults in the night schools, beside a great many receiving private instruction. He estimates that between 4,000 and 5,000 in all are under instruction. He speaks of the scarcity of provisions, and states that there will be no chance of collecting taxes until the cotton shall come in. No opinion is expressed or facts given regarding the cotton or other crops in either of the reports. is little change in the feedings evinced toward the freedcrops in either of the reports.

Numerous delegations have arrived from distant points, and others are delegations have arrived from distant points, and others are expected to-morrow. The procession will be formed as 10 o clock, and will no doubt be a most impressive affair. There will be a large attendance of Knight Templars, and the Grand Master of the Grand Encampment, Henry S. Palmer of Milwaukee, is expected to be present. The Bultimore Ledges have been making costly arrangements in the way of new banners, regain. &c. some of which are really magnificent. The President of the United States, members of the Cabinet, and the Governor of the State have been invited to be present to view the ceremonies and it is expected that the President will reach here in an early train to-morrow morning.

11 p. m.—It is raining slightly this ovening, with indications of unfavorable weather for the Masonic procession to-morrow, in which event the oration and other cere monies will take place in the Maryland Institute Hall. President Johnson will be received at the depot by the Knights Templar.

MASONIC REUNION.—For some time past the Masonic Fraternity of New York have had in contemplation a grand scheme. It is now about to be consummated. The want of a home for the indigent widews and children of Free and Accepted Masons has long been felt, and it is now determined that a suitable say jum should be crested. Afready the Masons have accumulated a fund of $200,000 for this purpose, but this is not supposed to be sufficient for the successful working of the undertaking; consequently a Masonic Fair will be held, commencing on the 5th of December, at the building corner of Grand and Crosby-sts. Last evening the place selected for the Fair was opened for inspection, and for the assignment of space. Dodworth's band was in attendance, and those terpaichereaulty inclined indulged in the giddy whirl of the "many" dance. Judging from the attendance of last evening, there is no doubt the fair will be eminently successful, and will contribute in no small measure to the object in view.

THE FENIAN TRIALS.

LIBERATION OF THIRTY-NICE PENIAN PRISONERS-KIND TREATMENT FROM THE JAIL OFFICIALS.

Their discharge was conducted with great secrety, and it was only about an hour before their being sent away that the prisoners themselves were made aware of the joyous tidings. They were furnished with transportation by the Government to the Suspension Bridge, and, in accordance with instructions, a special train was provided by the Great Western Railway.

This drew up in the rear of the jail at about 10 o'clock, and shortly afterwards the men were sefely lodged on board, and in charge of a goard of 20 men with a corporal ane sergeant, under command of Lieut, Harrison, 17th Regiment, took their departure for their destination shortly afterwards.

As the prisoners were marched out of the goal, in pairs, to the train alongside, the sight of the line of soldiers drawn up proved a source of uneasiness to some, at least, of the party, who did not appear to feel sure but that something different from a joyful release was intended.

The uneasiness was soon dispelled as the friendly disposition of all became apparent, and the prisoners received a good suppor at the station before starting, and each was presented with a $5 greenback, in order that they might not be wholly destitute—the money being provided by the American Consul.

On reaching the Falls the Fenians bade good bye to their escort by giving three hearty cheers for the Sheriff, the Goaernor of the goal, and the goal officers generally. They naturally felt delighted at their being once more across the Frontier.

DON MIGUEL, EX-KING OF PORTUGAL.

Don Maria Evanst Miguel, ex-King of Portugal, whose death is announced by the Cable, was born at Lisbon, Oct. 26, 1802. He was the third son of King John VI., and when six years old followed his parents to Brazil, where, in consequence of his education being altogether neglected, he soon exhibited signs of the worst character. He returned to Portugal in 1822, being unable to read and to write. At the instigation of his mother he placed himself at the head of the clerical and absolutiot party. On June 2, 1822, he headed an unsuccessful insurrection against his father. He was pardoned, made another insurrectionary attempt in 1822, was again pardoned and even appointed Generalissims of the Portuguesse army. Soon, after the assassination of the most inimate commetor of the King, the Marquis of Soule, he started a third insurrection (April 30, 1824), imprisoned the Ministers, and expelled his father, who swed the restoration of his rule only to the vigorous interference of the foreign embassedors. Don Miguel, banished together with his mother, by a decree of May 12, withdrew to Paris, and later to Vienna, when he showed a great admiration of the policy of Metternich.

After the death of King John VI., the legitimate heir, Don Pedro, Emperor of Brazil, cueded the throne of Fortugal to his daughter, Maria La Gioria, whose hand, together with the title of Regent, he othered to Don Miguel. The latter accepted, and, after long hexitation, consented to take an oath upon the Constituent Cortes. At the same time he repudiated the plan of a marriage with his nices, who was prevented from landing and compelled to repair to England. The partisans of Donna Maria were conquered, and only maintained at the Island of Terceira. The brief reign of Don Miguel was signalized by the grossest abuses, and the carry and the finances were fix a most deplorable condition. In 1831 the cause of Donna Maria and oaptived the entire Portuguese feet. In 1831 Eaginal also declared against Don Miguel themselves wit

PRANK BLAIR CERTAINLY DEPEATED.

BT. LOUIS, Nov. 19.—C. H. Branscomb has been declared elected to the Legislature over Frank Blair. The votes elected to the Legislature over Frank Blair. The votes cast after sundown being declared legal by the Attorney-General of the State. This decision also elects S. D. Ridgely, Radical, to the State Senate, and increases Gen. Piles's majority. Branscomb and Ridgely have received their certificates from the County Clerk. The Legislature will probably prevent a recurrence or this trouble.

On election day, a returned rebel hurrahed for Jeff. Davis in Springfield, Mo., and was shot through the hand.

LOCAL POLITICS.

A BOW IN TAMMANY HALL.

During the past two or three weeks considerable dissatisfaction has manifested itself among the members of the Tammany Hall organization \( \text{--}\text{regard to what has been termed by the orthodox members, "the base treachery" of some individuals belonging to the Tammany Hall General Committee, who it is said betrayed the regular candidate McCool, and went over to the enemy in the person of Miles O'Reilly, the successful candidate for Register. The two most obnoxious persons were Alderman James O'Brien of the Twenty-first Ward, and Deputy-Sheriff Thomas H. Ferris, who were cordial supporters of the anti-ring candidate at the last election. The General Committee was called last evening for the purpose of ridding its body of these recalcitrant members, and the Head Center, Wm. M. Tweed, held the chair. A great deal of dissatisfaction was observed among the younger men at the proposed capulsion of O'Brien and Ferris, as they had a number of "roughs" present to contest the "action," and several lovely little lights occurred during the avening sproceedings. The boys seemed to enjoy the fun highly, and several black eyes were administered it is understood. The managers of the ring sought to keep everything secret, but it did not succeed, and it is understood that Mr. O'Brien and Mr. Ferris still remain on the roll of Tammany Hall. The police were not called in, as it was a mere family disturbance, not calculated to interest outsiders. These are said and dreary days for old Mother Tammany, when she cannot keep her rebellious children in subjection. EIGHTEENTH ASSEMBLY DISTRICT REPUBLICAN ASSO-
